ADAM DUNLAP

Adam Dunlap

Born and raised in Portland, Oregon along with his twin sister, Adam has always aimed high, and he always seems to get there. At 20 years old, he graduated Oregon State University with honors and a degree in Business Administration. In spite of the opportunities that awaited him in academia, Adam decided to pursue the arts through a modeling and acting career.

In 2015, Adam landed a recurring role on the NBC drama "Grimm." It was a transformative experience that inspired him to shift his focus entirely to acting. Immediately noticed for "his intensity and presence" in the audition room, his new focus landed him a principal role in the film, "A Cutting Shadow." His work on set so impressed another director that upon wrapping, Adam was offered the emotionally explosive lead in the film, "Falling Through Darkness." In this role Adam played a PTSD-suffering war vet.

The attention Adam received from this role led to many others including the lead in a period film called, "RAT" where he played an undercover cop that had infiltrated the mob. Most recently, Adam had a co-starring role in the Netflix show "Trinkets," and of most prominence Adam played a principal character in the feature film, "The Water Man." The film was the directorial debut of David Oyelowo, and it stars Oyelowo, Rosario Dawson, Lonnie Chavis, and Maria Bello with Oprah Winfrey serving as an executive producer. The film debuted as a top 10 film on Netflix in 36 countries around the world.

An ardent student of the craft of acting, Adam prides himself on working hard, and he relishes long days on set and the chance to play physical roles. He has a reputation for being a great team player and always bringing joy and kindness to set. He is fluent in English, Spanish, and French, and he is an avid writer and thinker. Adam studies acting under multiple teachers, and on the weekends he can be found reading acting books and studying the films of his favorite actors.
